Researched by Ulatan, Jeffrey. (2020) based on FUND Performance Tear Report on S&P Capital IQ. (01/04 /2020)

Vanguard S&P 500 ETF (VOO)

Expense ratio: 0.03%

2019 performance: +31%

→ The Vanguard S&P 500 ETF is the first on our list due to the diversification of the fund's portfolio which makes it rank among the largest American companies. The fund started its operation in 2010 and has an asset of $520 billion with an annual cost of just $3 for every $10,000 invested

This fund's top holdings include Amazon.com Inc., Apple Inc., Microsoft Corp., Facebook Inc. and JPMorgan Chase & Co. Due to its wide range of exposure to roughly 500 U.S. large-cap stocks, thus makes it qualify to attract investors' attention in 2020.

Vanguard High Dividend Yield (VYM)

Expense ratio: 0.06%

2019 performance: +23%

The fund was founded in 2006, charges just $6 for every $10,000 invested and controls $38 billion worth of asset, making it highly liquid. VYM tracks the FTSE High Dividend Yield Index thereby exposing shareholders to more than 400 U.S dividend paying stocks.

Due to the fund's astonishing performance in 2019 and its reasonable dividend payout it will serve as a point of interest for investors in 2020.

Invesco QQQ ETF (QQQ)

Expense ratio: 0.20%

2019 performance: +38.6%

The ETF featured among the largest in the world, thereby making it the most traded ETF in the US based on its average volume of trades.

It was founded in 1999, it tracks the NASDAQ-100 index and it cost $20 annually for every $10,000 invested. Due to its positive historical records and 2019 buoyant performance, it is thereby considered as one of the most favourable environment for investors to look up to in 2020.

Vanguard Dividend Appreciation ETF (VIG)

2019 performance: +28%

Expenses: 0.06%

The fund was founded in 2006 and has a net asset of $50.5 billion. VIG is financially-stable, low-cost ETF paying steady distributions and one of the best funds for investor willing to engage on a long term investment in stocks of companies that consistently increase their dividends.

VIG holds major dividend-paying companies like Johnson & Johnson, Procter & Gamble Co, Walmart Inc, Microsoft Corp and Visa Inc.
